One of the world’s most important newspaper archives is now available on-line to U.S. libraries and academic institutions

- As originally published
- Page-by-page
- By date or relevance
- Fully-searchable text
- Simple, fast and instinctive

The Daily Mirror Archive is an essential resource for researchers of 20th-century World History

- Modern British, European and World History
- Anglo-American relations
- Women’s Studies
- Journalism & Media
- History of Fashion
Founded in 1903, The Daily Mirror began as the world’s first newspaper for women – edited and written exclusively by women. Its early issues are an invaluable primary source for feminist historians everywhere. In years to come, The Daily Mirror would continue to emphasize women’s issues and interests.

In 1904, The Daily Mirror was transformed into the first photographic pictorial mainstream newspaper in the UK. The Archive contains tens of thousands of unique photographs documenting world history as it happened.

By the late 1930s, The Daily Mirror was the largest-selling newspaper in Great Britain, selling 5 million copies a day at its peak. Its success as a tabloid directed at the Left-Liberal working classes lasted for decades. The Archive offers primary access to how the majority of British people viewed the world, nation and culture.
Published and available from Digitorial Limited

Contact

Paul Spike, Director, North American Operations, Digitorial Limited

If you are interested in knowing more about The Daily Mirror Archive and how to access it through your Library or Academic Institution, please email spike@digitiorial.co.uk or telephone 001 646 301 6904